FROM BROKERS

Break away from the mold of the traditional broker. The average broker meets your basics needs when it comes to claims, plans and renewal negotiation. What about open enrollment? New legislation? The DOL?

FROM TECHNOLOGY COMPANIES

New tech giants can be focused on curing the pains of HR such as benefits administration and small compliance issues, but lack the personal touch and insurance expertise that an independent broker like us provides.

Dear Friends,

If you love a good story—and who doesn't—then you're in luck!

You can learn a lot about a community through the people who live, work and play there. This, our 7th edition of the Grove City Community Guide features an eclectic cast of local characters, each of whom is inspiring in their own unique way.

Our local business owners may have followed different life paths and vocations, but share a common underlying theme: a passion for their work, the resilience to try, try again and a large measure of entrepreneurial spirit. They also agree that Grove City is a business-friendly place that is more collaborative than competitive, which is particularly inviting to newcomers.

The true character and values of a community are reflected in how well they take care of their less fortunate friends and neighbors, and Grove City does this better than most, with its own United Way and Relay for Life. Both organizations depend upon the tireless efforts of a few individuals who are devoted to lending a hand to those in need, and making our corner of the world a better place to live, and we appreciate them.

Speaking of character, as in the kind that comes from playing team sports, read about Grove City's youth football program created to build confidence in even the smallest players, thanks to one dedicated couple who recognized a need for such a league. Less costly, more local and committed to safety and playtime, it's a great story about one way to equalize the playing field.

One of the local celebrities featured in this issue has a pesky habit of dissolving into thin air. The owner of the popular restaurant she inhabits had no idea when he purchased the business that he was also gaining custody of its' resident ghost, Thelma. How the two have come to terms with each other through the years makes for a fascinating ghost story.

I hope you enjoy reading these stories, which offer some insight into what makes Grove City truly special. And, I encourage you to patronize our generous advertisers and members, for without their support this magazine would not be possible.

Sincerely,

Beth Black

FOR THE GREATER GOOD

You can tell a lot about a community from the way it takes care of its vulnerable populations, including the elderly, the needy and the sick. Two excellent examples of the stuff of which Grove City is made are the Grove City Area United Way and the Grove City Relay For Life.

Grove City Area United Way

Years ago, charitable agencies and organizations turned to their local Community Chests for funding to support the good work they did to help their friends and neighbors in

Since 2005, Grove City Area United Way has awarded over $1.9 million in grants to local programs, and executive director Amy Foley said, “It’s important to remember that all of those dollars stay here in Grove City.”

Foley works with a 14 to 17 member volunteer board of directors each year who are charged with being “good stewards of donors’ funds,” through the rigorous process of reviewing grant requests from local agencies. The board of directors then awards the funds based on their potential to impact the community in five focus areas:

- Crisis intervention
- Helping children and youth succeed
- Strengthening families and promoting self-sufficiency
- Supporting vulnerable populations
- Community enrichment: education and development for youth and vulnerable populations

The board gives priority to those agencies that provide for the crucial basic needs of food, housing

GROVE CITY AREA UNITED WAY AGENCIES

times of need. As these community-based foundations evolved into United Way organizations, Grove City followed suit.

and utilities when allocating campaign funds, followed by those that enrich the community.

Foley calls her job extremely rewarding, yet at times, disheartening. “Sometimes I wonder if we’re doing enough,” she said. “Grove City is one of those communities that seems ideal in every way, but if you look just below the surface, you’ll find a great deal of need.”

Nearly one-third of Grove City School District’s students qualify for a free or reduced lunch. The Grove City Community Food Pantry feeds 1,200 hungry people every month. Foley receives two to three calls weekly from people who don’t know where to turn for help in the face of utility shut-off or eviction. “So many people are struggling just to get by,” she said. “They are just one health crisis, accident or missed paycheck away from being penniless and homeless,” she said.

Foley is pleased that rather than simply directing money at a problem, Grove City Area United Way supports programs that help people help themselves in order to break the cycle of poverty, including counseling and financial management and literacy classes.

On the brighter side, Foley said that events like Stuff the Bus, which provides needy children with school supplies and Day of Caring, that has hundreds of volunteers turning out on a Saturday morning to get their hands dirty to improve their community make it all worthwhile. “There’s nothing as heartwarming as seeing the smile of a child who’s never had a new backpack for school get one for the very first time.”

Amy Lynn Clark
Community Manager

Grove City Relay For Life

Until 2016, Grove City citizens who wished to participate in the American Cancer Society’s Relay for Life lent their support to the Mercer event. But, community manager Amy Lynn Clark saw an opportunity and a need to provide Grove City with a Relay of their own. “There was a passion in the community to have one in their own backyard,” said Clark, who has been involved with the American Cancer Society since she helped her grandmother with a swim-a-thon at just seven years old.

So, after “lots of conversations,” the decision came down from American Cancer Society’s regional offices to pilot a Relay in Grove City. The caveat was that they had an extremely tight timeline to make it happen—six months.

Clark’s search for just the right person to coordinate the event turned up Lori Boshaw, who’d chaired a Relay in her former hometown in Oregon. “She is everything a chairperson should be,” said Clark. “Tireless, dedicated and smart. She eats, breathes and sleeps Relay.”

The first stop for Clark and Boshaw was the Grove City Area Chamber of Commerce to meet with Executive Director Beth Black for help with identifying key leaders in the community who would support their efforts. “Beth’s help was invaluable,” said Clark. “She knows the shakers and the movers, and gave us great insight on how to bring them on board.”

As the July event date drew ever nearer, Boshaw and Clark and their team found themselves working around the clock to make sure all the details would be in place for their inaugural event. “There are a lot of moving parts to coordinate,” said Clark. “People would be amazed.”

When the big day arrived, it came with a sketchy weather forecast, but as with most large-scale affairs, Relay is a rain or shine event. The rain that drizzled off and on during the day matured into a torrential downpour at 3 o'clock, just as the opening ceremony was about to begin. Survivors took their victory lap around the track during a brief respite from the showers, and several other activities throughout the evening, including the emotional lighting of the luminaria went on despite Mother Nature's lack of cooperation.

But, early the following morning, Boshaw and Clark cried uncle and cancelled the event. "In all my years of involvement with Relay, I've never had to do that," said Boshaw. "But, you can only change your socks so many times."

In spite of the challenges, Grove City's first Relay for Life was an "incredible success" said Clark. "For a first year event, I was shocked with the results." Eleven teams helped raise $40,000, including $3,500 from its flagship sponsor, Grove City Medical Center. "The support of this community far exceeded our expectations," said Clark.

Although the fundraising aspect of Relay For Life is critical to supporting education, research, patient advocacy and services, it's about much more than the money. "Each participant takes something special away with them from Relay," said Clark.

For years, Clark had seen a diehard cancer survivor at area Relays, walking the survivors' lap hand in hand with his wife. "When he learned about the Grove City Relay, he was so excited to walk it in his own hometown, and when I saw him rounding the track, I said to myself, 'That's what it's all about.'"

Relay For Life helps People Facing Cancer

Examples of how Relay For Life funds are put to work in Pennsylvania

- 25,000 requests from people seeking information, help and support via phone, email and online chats
- More than 30,200 rides to and from treatment
- Patient navigators helped guide more than 1,900 patients through the healthcare system
- Helped more than 1,600 people manage the appearance-related side effects of treatment
- Nearly 26,000 nights of free or reduced cost lodging were provided

How You Can Help

Grove City College Interns

Grove City College students Annabelle Rutledge and Hannah Vaccaro

As well as getting the valuable, out-of-the-classroom experience they were supposed to get out of their internships, Grove City College students Annabelle Rutledge '17 and Hannah Vaccaro '18 can also say they changed thousands of lives for the better.

The women spent the summer of 2016 working as interns on fundraising for the Wexford, Pa.,-based Christian and East African Equatorial Development (CEED) Trust, an international nonprofit aid organization focused on improving living and economic conditions in poverty-stricken areas of the world.

Their job was to find the money that fuels CEED's mission to drill hundreds of wells in Uganda, a country facing a debilitating water crisis. They ended up forging a partnership that will magnify the impact of CEED's efforts.

Annabelle, a history major from Carmichael, Calif., and Hannah, an entrepreneurship major from Merrimack, N.H., brainstormed and worked the internet and the phones, spending hours on research to create portfolio materials, make presentations, and cold call dozens of water-oriented organizations to garner support.

UGANDA
WELLS

"I have never had to cold call so many organizations and I learned how to pitch the organization's mission to save lives in two minutes or 30 minutes," Hannah said. "Understanding the fine details of CEED in order to prove to donors why this organization was valuable to Uganda and worth the investment is tangible learning I normally could not get in the classroom."

The fruit of that labor was a call Annabelle made to Wells of Life, an organization dedicated to bringing clean, safe drinking water to millions of Ugandans. "In the moment it seemed like a last-ditch effort, but in hindsight I can see that it was a divine appointment," she said.

Instead of a receptionist or executive assistant – or even another intern – Annabelle's cold call reached Nick Jordan, the organization's founder. The match was perfect. CEED was looking for funds to build wells and Wells of Life was looking for ways to continue their mission. Annabelle connected Jordan to CEED's board of directors and a partnership was forged. A contract between the two non-profits was recently linked. Graham Hodgetts, president of CEED, said the women were relentless.

THE DAY I LEARNED THAT

OVER FIVE YEARS
BECAUSE OF THAT
PHONE CALL
WHICH UNCOVERED THE HARMONIOUS MISSIONS
OF THESE TWO AMAZING
ORGANIZATIONS,
I CRIED!

“As Annabelle and Hannah continued to make so many cold calls we could hear vestiges of desperation in their voices, but their determination prevailed. They would not take ‘no’ for an answer and just doggedly kept calling until they found Nick at Wells of Life. We are very impressed and grateful for them really sticking with it – and to Grove City College for producing two such winners,” Hodgetts said.

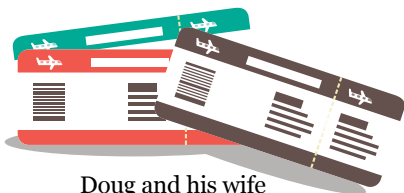

“The day I learned that Wells of Life would sponsor 500 wells over five years because of that phone call which uncovered the harmonious missions of these two amazing organizations, I cried,” Annabelle said. “God blessed the work we did.”

McMULLEN TRAVEL GOING PLACES

Just because you help make people's dreams come true for a living doesn't necessarily mean that you have a dream job, Doug McMullen of McMullen Travel & Tours will tell you. "Even though we may make it seem easy, a lot of work goes into ensuring every detail is covered," said McMullen. "There are lots of variables that can spoil a client's travel experience, but it's up to us to make sure that doesn't happen."

Doug and his wife

Linda have been planning their clients' vacations for nearly 30 years at the company his father and mother founded in 1951 when they purchased Grove City's bus station. Bus travel, including local and charter trips was brisk business in those days, and Bob McMullen cut his teeth in the travel industry behind the wheel of a motor coach.

Throughout his remarkable career, the elder McMullen was active in travel and tourism professional societies and worked diligently to advance the status of the travel agency industry. In 1990, just three years before his death, he was recognized for his significant contributions with the American Society of Travel Agents' esteemed Rosenbluth Award, which added to his already impressive collection of professional accolades.

ALL INCLUSIVES

CRUISES

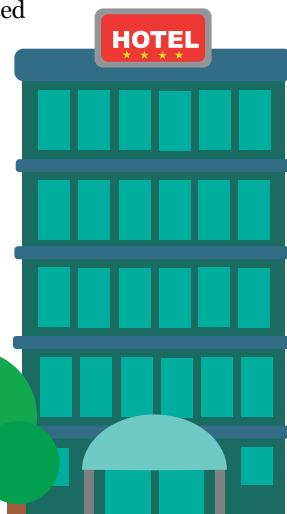

AIRLINE TRAVEL

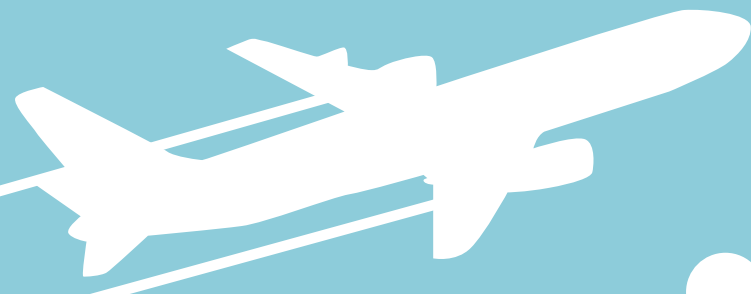

While a large percentage of McMullen's business is comprised of planning all-inclusive vacations—the Caribbean and Mexico are especially desirable destinations—cruises and escorted tours are also very popular. And, in spite of the perceived convenience and savings associated with purchasing airline tickets on-line, the agency handles its fair share of air travel. "Many of our clients realize it's definitely more efficient, and usually more cost-effective for us to manage it for them," said McMullen. "The $20 we charge to book their domestic flights is well worth it, when they consider the hours they'd spend at their computer doing it themselves."

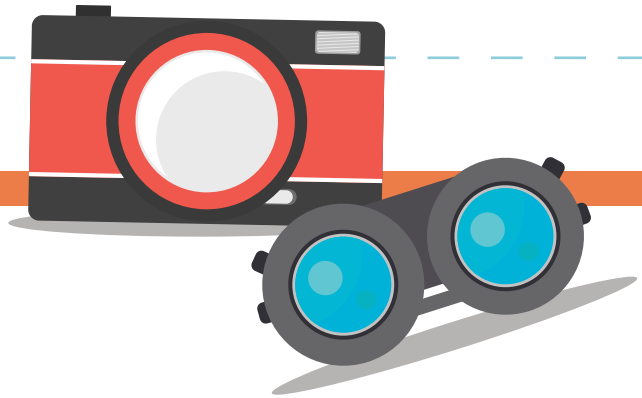

In fact, rather than negatively impacting his business, the advent of Internet travel planning sites has actually enhanced McMullen's business. Smart travelers learn that there's a lot of misinformation out there—pictures can deceive and reviews can be biased, and what starts out as a way to save money can end up as a

Working with clients who have a
is particularly enjoyable

nightmare before you know it. “Things can go wrong very quickly,” said McMullen. “And, boo-boos can be very expensive to fix.”

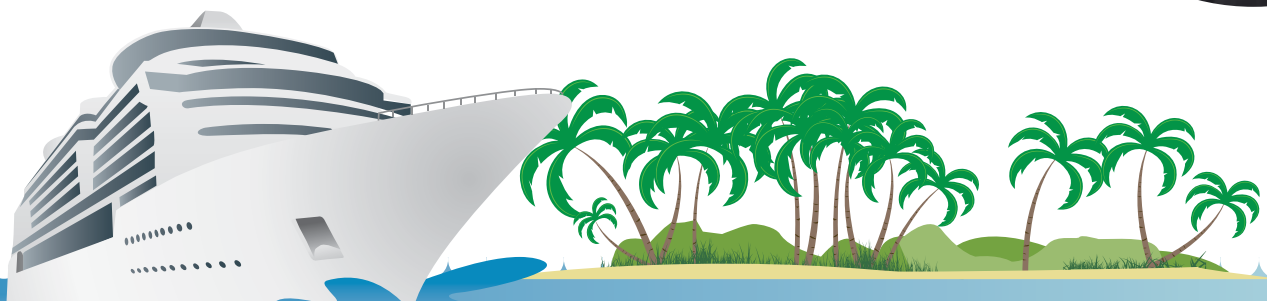

Working with clients who have a sense of adventure is particularly enjoyable, and among McMullen’s regular clients is one couple in particular who take two big trips each year to unusual and out of the norm destinations. “They’re great fun to work with,” he said. “They definitely have the travel bug and love visiting faraway destinations with action-packed itineraries.”

Along with planning destination weddings, honeymoons and anniversary trips for clients, McMullen also arranges international escorted trips for over 300 local university and college students each year. “Most of these young people have never been out of the country, and some haven’t ever flown,” said McMullen. “There’s nothing quite like seeing their excitement and enthusiasm—it’s a great feeling to be a part of that.” Sounds kind of like a dream job, doesn’t it?

WAY MORE Than Just a T

Perhaps no one is more surprised at the success and notoriety of his “World Famous” t-shirt business than the former baseball card wheeler-dealer, musician and home improvement man himself, Nathan Depew. “It’s kind of crazy when you think about it,” said the soft-spoken president of Earth Sun Moon.

His is the familiar story of a right-brain thinker with a creative gene and maxed out credit cards, and a business born in a basement. That was 21 years ago. Today, Earth Sun Moon employs 170 and fills 300,000 orders annually, worldwide, but mostly in the United States and Canada. But, his was not an overnight success, and the journey hasn’t always been a straight line for Depew. “It’s been a long, expensive learning process,” he said. “But, every step of the way taught me something important.”

Once he decided to start a t-shirt company, the next step was to come up with an idea for a signature design. Intrigued by a volume of botanical drawings he found in an old set of German encyclopedias his mother-in-law had, he based his first venture on a series of nature prints. While they weren’t hot sellers, they lead to a critical discovery—niche marketing. Depew carved out a segment of the botanical prints that pictured mushrooms, and promoted them to mycology clubs across the country. Mycologists have a fondness for fungi and they loved Depew’s shirts—he picked up 20 orders from club members.

He dabbled in unique packaging, including rolled up lightning bug shirts stuffed into custom made acrylic Mason jars complete with air holes in the screw-on lids, and bird shirts nestled inside—what else—bird nests. “They might sound silly, but they got us on the map,” said Depew.

In spite of challenging market forces, an economic downturn and fierce competition, Earth Sun Moon has grown steadily, with distinct “growth spurts” along the way. Depew’s workforce is comprised of designers, printing press operators, embroiderers, customer service specialists who staff its call center and a full-scale management team that includes finance, marketing and product development.

“An employer’s primary concern should be WHAT’S BEST FOR EACH PERSON—which is easier said than done—but it is worth fighting for every day.”

Earth Sun Moon’s product line has expanded far beyond the original nature prints, although a sense of the original concept runs through much of the company’s offerings, with the “Advice from” series ever popular among customers. The designs feature an artistic drawing—usually an animal, bird or plant—offering a tongue-in-cheek, yet meaningful approach to self-improvement. A large black bear wading through knee-deep water offers the following tips for better living:

- Live large
- Climb beyond your expectations
- When life gets hairy, grin and bear it
- Eat well
- Live with the seasons
- Take a good, long nap
- Look after your honey!

Along with outdoor activity and Star Wars themed designs, Earth Sun Moon also prints custom orders of small quantities on sweatshirts, hoodies and hats as well as t-shirts, of course.

Depew’s management style reflects his personal guiding principles. “An employer’s primary concern should be what’s best for each person—which is easier said than done—but it is worth fighting for every day,” he said.

Earth Sun Moon is not a rules-based environment, and he believes that the best way to influence people’s behavior is to set a strong ethical example at the top level of leadership. “T-shirts are a means to an end—the primary reason the company exists is to serve the people that work here.”

PRESENT Company

If you're fortunate enough to receive a birthday present that comes tucked inside a bag bearing an unmistakable black brocade design, popping with sunflower yellow tissue, then you are lucky, indeed. Because, odds are excellent you're getting a "beautiful, unique gift" from Grove City's charming, one of a kind gift shop, B'gifted.

Owners Mary Jo Palmer and Lisa Pritchard agree they are in the business of "making people happy," and an unhurried meander through this jaunty space says they have succeeded in grand fashion.

As partnerships go, theirs is utterly harmonious, with Pritchard describing herself as the "LA!" to Palmer's "la" in the singing voice for which she is locally famous. And, much like their personality traits complement each other, so do their preferences, which means you'll find everything from "frills to funk" at B'gifted.

The women opened b'gifted in 2011, after conducting a year of research, which included visiting lots of other gift shops. "We travelled all over, getting ideas and advice from owners," said Palmer. And, even though they gleaned all they could from those who had gone before them, they soon discovered their biggest learning curve: predicting what would catch the eye of their customer. "It's all about trends," said Pritchard. "And, just when you think you have it figured out, it changes."

Their solution is to continually reinvent b'gifted, adding and discontinuing lines of merchandise in response to their popularity—or lack thereof. "We spend a lot of time researching buying patterns in other areas, checking out what's new and different at gift shows and evaluating our own sales," said Palmer.

B'gifted is known for its selection of distinctive women's accessories, and its commitment to selling the work of local artists and socially responsible items, in support of children's and environmental causes. Out of the ordinary greeting cards, an exclusive line of customizable serving ware and an exceptional collection of extremely affordable fashion jewelry add to the shop's far reaching appeal. Shopping for a baby gift? Baby b'gifted is totally dedicated to all things small and wonderful. For the owners, it's a mission to help every customer find the perfect gift for that special person, no matter how small or large their budget may be, said Palmer.

The owners share a keen appreciation for innovative marketing, which drives events like Girls' Night Out and trunk shows, as well as special sales and discounts. Most recently, B'gifted launched a digital rewards program to help build customer relationships. They are community minded, participating in all of Olde Town Grove City's events, like the annual Wine Walk and Home for the Holidays, and are part of the group effort behind the annual Farm to Table dinner. "We love being part of this community," said Pritchard.

the DOCTOR IS IN

hos•pi•tal•ist

Noun: a dedicated in-patient physician who works exclusively in a hospital

The term hospitalist was first coined by Robert Wachter and Lee Goldman in a 1996 New England Journal of Medicine article. The scope of hospital medicine includes acute patient care, teaching, research and executive leadership related to the delivery of hospital-based care.

Hospital medicine, like emergency medicine, is a specialty organized around a site of care (the hospital), rather than an organ (like cardiology), a disease (like oncology), or a patient's age (like pediatrics).

So, what does all this have to do with Grove City Medical Center? Beginning in January, the hospital began working with hospitalists, which has been a boon for both patients and staff. Tony Bono, RN, Vice President of Patient Services was instrumental in launching the program. "Our patients now have 24-hour, 7-day bedside care by a physician or nurse practitioner right here in our facility," said Bono. "Our nursing staff benefits too, with easy in-house access to a physician at all times. It's truly a win-win."

Dr. Frank Farone, Regional Director of Emergency Resource Management Inc., the hospitalist group with which GCMC has partnered, says the medical specialty was created to address the issue of "interruptive days" experienced by doctors. "A typical day goes like this: hospital rounds, return to office to see patients, call from emergency room to go back to the hospital, then return to the office to resume patient appointments, and on and on,” he said.

With a hospitalist managing inpatient care, there is much better, faster workflow, and improved utilization of the hospital’s vast technology for quick diagnostic turnarounds.

“A lot of the pieces in the inpatient puzzle, including information from the primary physician can come together far quicker now with the advent of hospital medicine,” said Dr. Farone.

“Adding the hospitalist program was an outstanding decision by our organization,” said Bono. “One that clearly reinforces our commitment to continue to provide great care to the people of our community.”

FAQ's

How often will the hospitalist see me?

The hospitalist will see you as often as needed. If an emergency occurs during your visit, he or she will see you right away.

Will the hospitalist meet with my family?

Our hospitalists are available throughout the day to explain procedures and test results, and to answer questions.

Is my primary care physician still involved?

Yes. Our hospitalists work closely with your physician, providing updates and asking for information when they need it. A complete summary of your hospital stay will be sent to your physician at the time of discharge.

What if I need another specialist while I'm in the hospital?

The hospitalists work closely with all of the specialists in the hospital to give you the best care.

What about my follow-up care?

Once you're discharged, your primary care physician will provide any follow-up care that you need. If you don't have a primary care physician, a list of appropriate physicians will be provided for you.

SPOT THE DIFFERENCES

There are seven things that are different between these two photos...can you find them?

Joe Jenkins came face to face with providence at just 16 years old, while straddling the ridge of a slate rooftop in Butler, Pennsylvania. The year was 1968, and that summer, he came to several conclusions that would chart his life's course: he was not all that scared of heights, he enjoyed roofing, but he was not about to make a living pounding asphalt shingles—certainly not after he discovered slate.

Initially, Jenkins was drawn to slate roofing for what it wasn't. "I liked that it's a natural material, and not manmade," he said. Then, he became captivated by the limitlessness of shape, texture and color varieties of slate. "Just like a painter's palette," he said. Ultimately, he thrived on the mental stimulation of fashioning these thin sheets of stone into simple, yet beautiful roofs ideally suited to shelter the dwelling they adorned for a lifetime. "It's simple stuff, but the devil's in the details," he said. "You must use your brain more when working with slate."

"TODAY, THERE'S A SHORTAGE OF SKILLED LABOR IN SLATE ROOFING."

a church roof he was dismantling collapsed, plummeting him to the basement—he's worked steadily, and estimates he's repaired, restored or installed about 1,500 slate roofs.

When he wasn't scaling roofs, he travelled the United States and abroad, checking out slate quarries and mines, as well as the craftsmanship of other slaters on homes, barns and churches.

Well known and respected as an expert on slate roofing, Jenkins poured his knowledge into the first of three editions of The Slate Roof Bible, Everything You Need to Know

Jenkins' attraction to slate developed into a passion. Over the last 47 years—except for a 6-week recovery from a fall sustained when about the World's Finest Roof in 1997. "I wrote it as a do-it-yourself guide to slate roofing," he said. Equal parts instruction manual, history lesson and photo album, Jenkins' conversational writing style makes the book an easy, yet fascinating read.

Jenkins recently retired from roofing and his sons, Brent and Orion have taken their turn at the trade. "Their skills have surpassed mine," he said. "They had a better head start than I did, working with me since they were teenagers." Spending more time with his feet firmly planted means Jenkins can focus on the business of preserving and advancing the time honored trade of slate roofing.

In 2006, he founded the Slate Roofing

Contractors Association, dedicated to the preservation of traditional roofing trades and practices. “Today, there’s a shortage of skilled labor in slate roofing,” said Jenkins. When World War II turned slate quarry workers into soldiers, the industry stalled out just long enough for artificial, man-made roofing material to gain a foothold in the housing market. “That generation of tradesman from the last century have all died, without passing their skills onto the next generation,” he said.

To help further the trade, Jenkins established the Slate Roof Training Center, where he and his sons teach classes ranging from basic installation to advanced skills, all with an emphasis on safety. Bees, bats, chimneys, wind, lightning, electrical wires and co-workers top the list of common rooftop hazards, and Jenkins teaches would-be slaters how to deal with each one. “There is a strong need for training,” he said. “Guys are literally begging for it.”

Jenkins’ main business is a robust on-line sales resource, where slaters can purchase specialty tools and products for their trade. “You can’t find these items at Home Depot,” said Jenkins. “Basically, you won’t find them anywhere but here.”

About ten times a year, he signs on as a consultant or an expert witness for insurance companies evaluating claims for damage due to faulty slate roof installation. Most recently, he worked on a $25 million claim by the University of Connecticut. The hardest part of this kind of work, he said, is seeing the damage incurred to buildings, many of them historic, due to the shoddy workmanship of other slaters. That, and the litigation. “I spent 12 hours in a room with 30 lawyers,” he said. “I’d rather be on a rooftop any day.”

OF THEIR OWN A LEAGUE

If you've ever been the kid who's the last one picked for any team—or, if you've been the parent of that kid—then you know just how traumatic the experience can be. Even though Ric and Heather Blanchard never had a son playing youth football—they have four daughters who cheered—from the sidelines they saw the need for a different approach to the game. “We saw way too many kids not getting any playing time because they were too small or not aggressive enough,” said Ric.

So, the Blanchards teamed up with three other like-minded couples, raised $20,000 and formed the Grove City Midget Football Club on the foundation that every child should be given every opportunity to safely participate in football. That was eight years ago, and since that time, the club has grown to 100 girls and boys, including cheerleaders. These children get the chance to actively participate, either in the game or the mandatory post-game scrimmage. As their motto says: “There are no benchwarmers here.”

The Grove City Midget Football Club belongs to the Shenango Valley Midget Football League, which, unlike other leagues, keeps the youth competing against teams in their own backyard. “It’s a much more local league,” said Ric. “Which makes it more accessible—and affordable for parents.” Lower registration fees, as well as less costly uniforms for players also help to make it more economical for families. “Even the cheerleaders’ outfits are less expensive,” said Heather, who coaches the cheer squad. The very competitive league has been around for over 50 years, and was where several NFL players were introduced to the sport.

"He stood levels. Last year, 30 Grove City Midgets were invited to the Pittsburgh Steelers training camp, where they had the opportunity to spend time with their idols. "Joey Porter made it a point to speak to every one of our kids, and they were on top of the world," said Ric.

"It was a once in a lifetime chance for our kids."

Above all, said Ric, Grove City Midget Football is built upon safety and sportsmanship. "Most kids would rather play on a losing team than sit the bench on the winning one," he said. "We emphasize that it's more important to play safe than to win a game."

Although Ric believes that every kid who participates in Grove City Midget Football is better for the experience, one in particular stands out. He was shy and quiet, definitely not a standout, his first year, said Ric. But, in his second year, emerged as a totally different kid. "He stood taller, he was confident and outspoken," he said. "The change in him was remarkable, and if he's the only kid who grows like that through this program, then we've done something really important." Chances are, he's not the only one.

One of the club's main objectives is to allow—and encourage—the smaller members of the team to play so they can build confidence, develop skills, and advance. With this in mind, the coaches and managers recognized the need for them to learn the safest game possible, so they became the first club in Mercer County to become certified as a USA Football Heads Up Football program. Through their Heads Up training, coaches learn health and safety protocols to use on and off the field. Much of their health education centers on prevention of concussion, as well as what to look for and how to respond to concussion symptoms in their players. They also learn about other football-related health topics, such as heat stroke, dehydration and sudden cardiac arrest. Proper equipment fitting and special tackling and blocking techniques comprise the safety training.

Heads Up is endorsed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, or NCAA, as well as the NFL for its commitment to making football a safer game at all

PICTURE THIS

When it comes to photography, if your skill set is limited to point and shoot, and your equipment is encased within your smart phone, then you would be wise to leave those once-in-a-lifetime memory shots to a professional. And, if you have any doubt that an enormous chasm exists between amateur and professional photography, experiencing the work of Shawn Sweeny will illuminate the difference for you in the time it takes to say “cheese.”

For more than 20 years, Sweeny has been overwhelming his clients, wowing his peers, and at times, amazing even himself with the images he’s captured through his lens. A recent Best of Show award at the Orlando, Florida School of Photographic Imaging competition rendered him nearly speechless. “All I could think was ‘did they really just say my name?’” he said. “It was amazing, I still can’t believe it.”

Sweeny’s work has had him floating on a lake in a boat, high up in a cherry picker and surrounded by hay in a barn loft to get the shots that thrill his clients. One vantage point remains unchecked on his bucket list: “I’m still waiting for the opportunity to shoot while flying in a helicopter,” he said.

Although he claims no particular specialty among his repertoire, which includes bridal/weddings, families, pets and product shoots, he does have a fondness for working with high school seniors. “They love to show off their personalities through their interests, what they like and who they are,” he said. “And, they’re great fun to work with.” The props they bring along add a dimension of creative challenge also, as he’s posed his teenage clients with everything from 4- to 18-wheelers to all manner of pets, including horses and reptiles.

Sweeny is committed to advancing his profession by sharing his knowledge and expertise with others who want to learn the art of photography. He was an instructor at the Art Institute of Pittsburgh for many years, and his basic camera class for local novices fills to capacity twice a year. Revered among fellow photographers for his innovative use of lighting, he frequently conducts workshops and seminars at conferences, with his lighting class always in high demand.

Composition, perspective and posing are important elements of quality photography, but lighting is the foundation upon which they are built, and Sweeny has turned the technique into an artform all its own. His collection of special purpose light fixtures includes a rather large, very unwieldy, custom-made hexagonal contraption. “I had a vision for a type of light that would create a certain effect, but I couldn’t find one anywhere,” he said. “So I figured out how to build it myself.”

Sweeny can make a subject look beautiful or sexy, tough or ghoulish, all by manipulating the angle and strength of the lighting. He maintains that a bad photograph is never due to an unattractive person in front of the camera lens, but an unskilled photographer behind it. “Lighting can highlight facial assets and downplay flaws, sculpting the body and face to their best advantage,” he said.

One teenage client told Sweeny when she viewed her senior portraits that she couldn’t believe it was her in the pictures. “She said she never thought she was pretty at all, and she was stunned to see how beautiful she really was,” he said. “And, she’ll be beautiful for a lifetime.”

REPURPOSED TREASURES

If 'recycling' was the buzz word of the 1970s, then 'repurposing' is its modern day counterpart. From sponge-painting flea market finds to flipping old homes, this generation has embraced the concept of afterlife in a whole new way.

In the world of jewelry, it's called conversion. Conversion jewelry has been a very popular trend, according to sales staff at Joden World Resources.

Owner jeweler Joe Murawski, who spent the first half of his career 'at the bench' now oversees two world class bench jewelers who restore and recreate treasures, while he and his son, Jay focus on buying and selling to other jewelers. "Joden is known as a jeweler's jeweler," he said. "When a jeweler's wife wants something really special, they call us."

Among their top selling conversion pieces are lingerie pin necklaces. In the late 1800s, women used pairs of these small pins to secure their chemise straps to keep them discretely hidden underneath their dresses. Today, these pins, which often feature filigree work, seed pearls, enamel and colored stones are being fashioned into stylish necklaces that have mass appeal. Every time a new batch is created, they fly out of the store, say staff.

One lovely platinum and gold lingerie pin set with diamonds was fit into the top of a vintage bangle bracelet. Making use of two components that were not usable on their own is often called a 'marriage.' Each necklace is sold with a small card telling the story of its origin and how it was recreated.

Another pin that lends itself well to conversion is the stick pin. Popular as far back as 200 years ago, men wore them on lapels, ties and scarves. Later, they caught on with women, as well, but are seldom worn today. Stick pins were made in all kinds of styles and designs, animals, flowers, crescent moons and swords, and often set with gem stones, diamonds, seed pearls or enamel. Stick pins are converted into tiny pendants, or used in groups to fashion charm bracelets, and can even be transformed into rings by soldering the charm to a narrow band.

Antique ladies watches are plentiful, but have little value, said Murawski. However, with a stroke of expert craftsmanship, they are recreated into unique and trendy pieces. "A 1920s watch made of platinum, set with high quality stones can become an exquisite bracelet that is truly one of a kind," he explained.

Brooches and pins convert easily into pendants—or combination pieces that can be worn either way—and Joden has done many of these through the years. Antique men's cufflinks are perfect for repurposing into earrings. Many are ornate, featuring hand engraving, multi-colored gold and gem stones. All that's needed is the addition of a post to the back of the piece, or they can be dangled from a French wire.

Converting outdated jewelry into new treasures is just one facet of Joden's business. From their location in the heart of Grove City, Joden caters to customers far and wide. "The funny thing is that Joden has a worldwide reputation, yet people from five miles away have never been here," said Murawski. However, once they visit, they often stay for hours. Joden lays claim to a collection of rare pieces that span hundreds of years of jewelry making, and customers are treated to a cup of coffee and an experience that rivals a visit to a jewelry museum. "It's better—we actually invite you to touch the jewelry," said Murawski.

Jeremiah Wann
President

Along with the items they intentionally make, manufacturing companies produce something else—lots of residual dust and fumes. These industrial byproducts are more than just a mere nuisance; they pose a real threat to the environment, as well as to the people who work around them.

Jeremiah Wann, president of Imperial Systems in Mercer County, describes his industrial air filtration solution as a “giant shop vac” that is equipped to control dust and fumes in large manufacturing and assembly plants. Imperial’s client list includes mega companies like Ford Motor Company, General Motors, Halliburton and Monsanto. The plant where Ford Motor’s aluminum-alloy F-150 truck body is made presents a unique challenge—laser fume created when the metal is cut to shape, but it’s nothing Imperial Systems can’t handle.

The 41-year-old entrepreneur learned the ins and outs of the air filtration industry working as a sales representative for a company that now competes with his for business. He started Imperial Systems in 2001, working out of the spare bedroom in his home, and since then his company has grown exponentially.

Today, Imperial Systems holds six technology patents and has contracts and equipment all over the world. The majority of its 50-person workforce at the professional level staff are engineers—professional, mechanical and software, as well as purchasing agents and a CPA. The labor force is comprised of assemblers, welders and installers.

A strong movement from two federal departments over the last ten years or so has helped to carve an even deeper niche for Imperial Systems—the Department of Environmental Protection, which focuses on outdoor air quality, and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, or OSHA, which launched a national program to protect employees from combustible dust hazards in the workplace. “Manufacturers must comply with the stringent standards set forth by DEP and OSHA,” said Wann. “And, we partner with them to ensure they meet or exceed these requirements.”

Industrial dust is vastly different from the household variety that dulls furniture and windowsills. Many industries produce combustible dusts, which are ultrafine particles that can explode when they are suspended in air under certain conditions. A dust explosion can be catastrophic, destroying entire factories and causing serious injury and even death to workers.

With the heightening awareness of the hazards of combustible dusts and tighter federal regulation and control on the horizon, the demand for industrial dust and fume collection is expected to double over the next five years. “The market is huge and continually growing,” said Wann, who is preparing his company to meet the increased need for air filtration systems with plans for relocation to a larger site. “This area is ideal, with easy access to airports in Pittsburgh and Cleveland, and for shipping by truck across interstates 79 and 80,” he said.

“Many industries produce combustible dusts, which are ultrafine particles that can Recruiting talent remains a challenging aspect of running his business, and Wann said he is always looking for qualified engineers, welders and sales professionals. “As the demand for our services grows, so does the need for highly trained and educated employees—they are the key to our success.”

Simply SPIRITED Dining

Even though it was a Hank Williams song that inspired Dave and Carolyn Carr to call their small roadside diner in Harrisville “The Family Tradition” back in 1985, the name could not be more fitting.

The Family Tradition Restaurant serves up homestyle meals seven days a week to many steady customers whose parents and grandparents were regulars before them. “We have lots of daily regulars,” said Carr. “In fact, some of them even come for two or three meals a day.”

Formerly known as “The Spot,” the diner was owned by Pearl Phillips, an 83-year-old widow who told Carr she wasn’t interested in selling when he first approached her about buying it.

However, running it single-handedly 24/7 was taking a toll on her, as well as the restaurant. “It had fallen into disrepair and had a pretty bad reputation at that time,” said Carr.

A friend strongly advised him not to buy it, but Carr persisted. Eventually, he convinced Phillips to sell to him when he agreed to let her stay on in the living quarters attached to the restaurant as long as she wished, which turned out to be another 13 years.

Most all-you-can-eat evenings, the place is teeming with customers—mostly families—eating their fill of jumbo wings or hand breaded, golden fried cod.

Carr took a flyer years ago as the first non-alcoholic restaurant in the area to add wings to its menu, despite his food salesman’s skepticism. “He thought it was a big mistake to try to sell wings without beer,” Carr said. However, his instincts were right on target. “They exploded,” he said. At its peak, The Family Tradition served over 75 tons of wings in a year’s time.

It’s also one of the best places to work in the borough of 900 people, and many of the employees have relatives who once worked behind the kitchen door or served customers in the dining room. Carolyn even worked there as a waitress when she was young, and, one 76-year-old server “came with the place” and continues to work a few days a week.

And, if the delicious food, charming atmosphere and congenial staff and proprietors don't beckon you to visit The Family Tradition, then maybe its epic ghost story will lure you in.

Carr has seen and done a lot of things in his lifetime and considers himself to be a guy grounded in reality. So, when he found himself face to face one night with the apparition of an elderly gray-haired woman, clothed in a dress and a shawl from another era, and standing in the corner of the stockroom, it's no surprise that he kept the incident to himself. "I knew what I'd seen, but it was hard to believe," he said.

Months later, a teenaged server came running from the stockroom—she'd encountered the same woman standing where Carr had seen her, and about a year after that, a cook spotted her in the walk-in cooler. The additional sightings validated that The Family Tradition did, indeed have a frequent guest who delighted in startling folks, and prompted Carr to set out to identify who she might be.

He learned from a few locals who had worked there in the 1950s that Pearl Phillips' husband died in 1956, leaving his wife the task of caring for The Spot Restaurant along with his blind mother, Thelma. They also confirmed that Thelma always wore a shawl and had died in her bedroom, which is now the stockroom. A team of paranormal investigators substantiated that Thelma's spirit is indeed a permanent, but harmless spirit resident of The Family Tradition.

Through the years, Thelma has made her presence known by sending small objects tumbling from shelves, setting the swinging doors in motion or making the tinkling sound of a spoon stirring a cup of coffee at the counter. "We've come to terms with her," said Carr.

Think you can't please everyone? A visit to Grove City will dispel your doubts!

A GREAT PLACE TO LIVE

Say you're planning a trip with a group of friends or family, and each of you has a different idea of what makes for a great time. While someone in your gang is a huge fan of communing with the great outdoors, another is all about indoor activities that center on rest and relaxation. Then, there are the face-your-fear adventurers and their counterparts who seek the thrill of the hunt for a great bargain. Think you can't please everyone? A visit to Grove City will dispel your doubts!

Grove City Premium Outlets offer a world-class, off-price shopping experience. With over 130 stores selling designer and name brands at prices 25-65 percent off retail, you'll find values and bargains galore. To sweeten the experience even more is Pennsylvania's tax-free status on clothing and shoes.

Olde Town Grove City is small business at its finest. You'll find authentic ethnic restaurants and specialty shops with something for everyone—all independently owned and operated by individuals who give new meaning to the concept of personalized customer service.

If you love the game of golf, but don't travel with your clubs, no worries. Grove City has not just one, but two disc golf courses—one located in Memorial Park and the other near the Hunter's Farm bike and walking trail. No cost, no dress code, no pressure, what could be better?

Longing for a more exciting outdoor adventure? How about with Skydive Pennsylvania Skydive Center at Grove City Airport for the jump of a lifetime? Jumps are weather dependent and reservations are a must.

Speaking of weather, if you find yourself with rain-delayed outdoor plans, there's no better indoor entertainment than taking in a movie at the historic Guthrie Theatre in Olde Town Grove City. Built in 1927, it has been lovingly preserved and shows first-run movies at a bargain price.

You're bound to work up an appetite during your stay, and there is no shortage of dining options here to appeal to even the most discriminating customer. If international cuisine is your thing, you'll be amazed at the variety in this area.

Jordan's Restaurant & Pizzeria offers unique Filipino food and has a reputation for delicious white pizza, Compadres Restaurant has the best chimichangas and margaritas around and Nonni's Corner Trattoria serves up authentic Italian specialties and homemade desserts. You can feast on traditional Greek fare at the Main Street Diner one weekend each month, and if you like Chinese, you haven't lived until you've tasted Bobo Rice Bowl's Singapore noodles and sesame balls. And, of course Grove City offers an impressive array of American options, too, from tap rooms and grilles to fine dining restaurants.

Was your Grove City bucket list longer than your stay allowed for? Guess you'll just need to add one more item to that list—visit Grove City again!

SHOP TILL YOU DROP

Grove City Premium Outlets offer a world-class, off-price shopping experience. With over 130 stores selling designer and name brands.

RELAX AND UNWIND

Whatever you're in the mood for, Grove City has it all: Filipino, Mexican, Italian, Chinese and of course American, all at your fingertips!

Career or Graduate School Placement
within six months of graduation

THIS DOORWAY OPENS MANY OTHERS

It's true that a college education can open doors, but students and families can't ignore the price of admission.

At Grove City College, tuition and costs run about half the national average before scholarships and financial aid. And while many students graduate with little or no debt, the real value of a Grove City College education is in the opportunities it creates to live a rewarding, purpose-driven life.

Students learn from faculty who are distinguished in their fields and have access to exclusive internships and amazing opportunities to study abroad and serve others. A highly-ranked Career Services Office helps students determine and pursue their professional calling, resulting in 97 percent of graduates at work or in graduate school with six months.
